

Save the Date!

2017 Working Class Studies Association Conference

Wednesday, May 31 to Saturday, June 3, 2017

Indiana University, Bloomington, Indiana

Class Struggle: Race, Gender, and Revolution

On the one hundredth anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution, our conference theme seeks to take stock of the legacy, present, and future possibilities of the idea of class struggle. What does working class struggle mean in an era of deindustrialization, precarious work, and predatory capital mobility? What new sites of working-class struggle can come to the fore with the weakening of trade unions and the erosion of the shop-floor and public space as places of working-class organization and contestation?

Send all inquiries to wcsa2017@gmail.com.